lires blace nenere. ere a ends ental

nd a well

A Macon statue that had been the center of a controversy that spread to many parts of the nation in 1918 was found resting on a pile of scrap iron in the side yard of the Taylor Iron Works.

Known as the Lady of the Fountain, the statue once stood in ging a fountain in the Cotton Avenue with Park in front of city hall. A group d by of Macon women objected to the and nudity of the statue and demanded that City Council nore remove her. end

A heated controversy followed. mv but on March 9, 1918, during the hirts administration of Mayor Glen nake Toole, the statue was removed. she Bridges Smith had placed the Lady in the park fountain during his term as mayor and was one of Telethe champions of the cause to ating keep her there. City.

Later, Smith gave the statue to ritt in the front row, and Carey Keen and Micky Windt in the second row. If you have a photo ma or more years ago that you would like to share, please have a photographic copy made so that you original. Attach as much identifying information as possible to the photo and send to Neighbors, Macon, Ga. 31208. Include a self-addressed, stamped envelope for the return of the photo.

George Riley who had been chief of police during Smith's administration, and Riley took her to his country home in Houston County.

Sometime around 1945, the Lady became the property of C.A. McAlister, president of Taylor Iron Works. It was noted that the statue was badly in need of a new coat of paint. The metal umbrella which once sheltered her from the rain was rusted and had a large hole in it.

McAlister said he hoped some day to have the Lady repaired, but he had no plans for the statue at that time. He noted that it was not for sale at any price.

CIRCLE A

One of the most enthusiastic group activities at the Booker T. Washington Community Center was the Teen-Age Club, an organization of high school girls and boys. Set up primarily to offer supervised recreational activities, the club also offered service projects and arts and crafts at its twice monthly meetings.

Officers included Melvin Gassaway, president, along with Warren Williams, treasurer; Ruby Billings, secretar Scott, vice preside The Junior Tee

The Collegians activities for other

One of the Cent ties was its health tal and well-baby of a year-round a for boys, the cent nastics and other and co-sponsored Recreation Depa ball and baseball h

Macon's only p blacks was located